

Old Colonial Style

1788-1840

When the first British Settlers arrived in Australia, there was no architecture to speak of. However as time progressed, local architects, keen to reflect English life, designed many of our famous buildings according to the Colonial Georgian style of the time.

The Australian representation of Georgian architecture was less stylised and somewhat more tempered. And this is where the typical Australian 'homestead' found its origins, with its hipped roof and verandah.

In the colony of Tasmania, 1820-1830 saw much prosperity, building and expansion of settlements. It was at this time that many buildings became a little more ornate and reminiscent of the Colonial Regency style.

It was towards the end of the 1830's that some of the classical lines of Grecian architecture also emerged.
